Mancala is an African stone game that is considered the world's oldest game. Mancala is the generic name given by anthropologists to a class of board games played throughout the African and Asian continents. Primitive African and Asian cultures believed that board games like Mancala indicated the fates of life decision as revealed by the Gods. Mancala is a game in which chance or probability play no part: it is strictly a game of strategy and mathematical ability. It is simple in concept, but challenging in its execution. Can be enjoyed by both adults and children alike. The playing board is individually crafted from exotic and domestic hardwoods. Game pieces are black glass. 19"L X 6"W
